INTRODUCTORY

Few people who live in Jamestown for any length of time, leave the city without again returning to it. Jamestown is not so large that its people lose interest in one another, and yet it is large enough to possess many of the advantages of the large cities. With diversified industries, and a population made up of people of various national origins, there is little of interest in any part of the world which does not reflect interest on the part of some section of its population.

Although Jamestown's civil officials are men and women possessed of liberal ideas, although the spirit of democracy animates the major portion of her citizenry; there is a lack of co-operation among her citizens in matters vital to the rapid progress such a well-blessed city should make. There is in fact a very general inclination to speak disparagingly of Jamestown, and a greedy attitude has often been manifested by some of those who owe their own success to Jamestown and who do not look kindly upon the efforts of others to emulate their example.

Any community is only as great as its citizens are great, and pride in a city develops from admiration for those who unselfishly labor for the good of the community, and in the end reap the greater and only true and lasting reward, the reward of service.

It is with the idea of encouraging such service that "Who's Who in Jamestown" is published. This edition is a preliminary edition and it is hoped that "Who's Who" will become a force in encouraging pride in Jamestown by honoring the service of its worthy citizens. The present edition serves as an index of many of our citizens who believe in Jamestown and are thinking of the welfare of Jamestown and the place it will occupy in the future.
